Negative Investor Behavior (1)

The largest single enemy of investors is themselves. The typical investor does not achieve the actual returns that mutual funds offer. This is due to poor attempts at market timing.

From 1987 to 2006, the S&P 500 Index earned 11 % per year, while the average investor earned a mere 4 % per year! The gap in performance was -7% annually.

Our Approach

Maintaining a long-term investment strategy is far easier said than done, especially in the face of disappointing short-term results.

We seek to help shareholders break out of the mindset of buying high and selling low that leads so many individuals, and even many investment professionals, to achieve unsatisfactory returns for the risks taken.

Principal Investment Strategies

The Fund seeks to achieve its objective through investing in other investment companies, exchange-traded funds, equity securities and fixed income securities. The securities are selected using the advisor's Contrarian Value (ConVal®) investment approach.

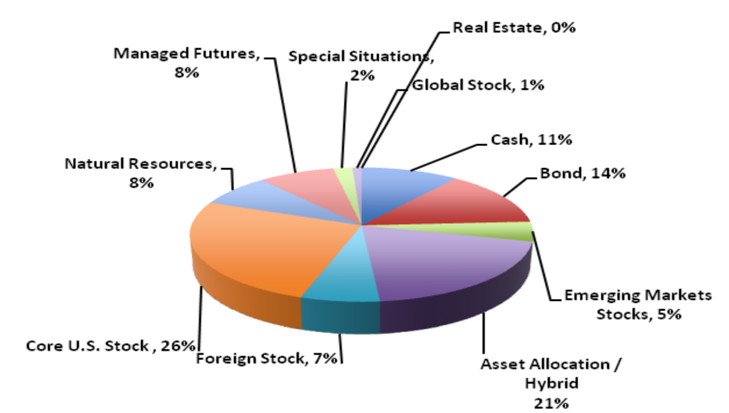
The Fund will adjust allocations to sectors, asset classes, etc. according to the advisor's view of what investments may provide the most attractive risk-adjusted returns over the near-term (6-12 months) and the long-term. The neutral stock/bond mix is 50/50. The stock exposure will typically range from 35-65% depending on the advisor's market outlook.

Investment Process

The ConVal® process results in a preference to invest in securities that are out of favor with and/or go unnoticed by most investors, and are therefore potentially undervalued. ConVal® plays a major role in selecting other investment companies, as well as in the top-down approach to tactical decisions that over- or underweight a given asset class or change the equity exposure of the Fund as a whole.

The Fund looks to take advantage of investor dissatisfaction and resulting price devaluation: buy low, wait for sentiment to change and prices to rise over time.

Underweight Allocation



The S&P 500 Index is a widely followed benchmark representing the investment performance of large company stocks in the U.S. The Fund follows a globally balanced investment strategy and is not intended to track the performance of the S&P 500.

Total return data includes both capital appreciation as well as reinvested income. Returns do not reflect any taxes payable by a shareholder due to income distributions or sale of shares. They also do not reflect any transaction, maintenance or other fees that may be assessed on an account with the Fund.

As with all mutual funds, past performance is not a guarantee of future results. The value of the Fund's shares will fluctuate and the value with which shares can be redeemed at a future date is unknown. Thus, the Fund is intended only for long-term investors and may not be appropriate for investors with a short investment time horizon or those who are unwilling to accept any risk of loss.

Mutual Funds involve risk including possible loss of principal.
